HORSE THIEF SOCIETY DISBANDS

No More Thrilling Adventures Chasing Bold Horse Thieves Since Automobiles Supplant the Horse—Divide Money and Quit.

Twenty-nine members of the Society for the Detection of Horse Thieves of the Towns of Clinton, Hyde Park and Rhinebeck assembled in the court room of the town hall, and decided by a vote of 25 to 4 to discontinue the exciting adventures accompanying the pastime of chasing bold and daring horse thieves and incidentally to share in the distribution of the funds on hand which amount to between four and five hundred dollars. As there are ninety-five members enrolled each will receive something over four dollars.

The society is over sixty years old and for many years performed valuable service to its members in running down horse thieves when that profitable enterprise was followed by well organized bands. George Henry Schultz in whose hands the funds of the society have reposed, served for nearly half a century in the capacity of treasurer, while John D. Lown has been president for thirty-two years when he laid down the gavel for the last time on New Year's day. Bert Klipp, of Hyde Park, proposed that the question of disbanding be deferred until next year on account of the small attendance, but his motion was defeated.

There is no small amount of sentiment connected with an organization that has existed for so many years and it is thought that if there had been a full attendance the proposition to disband might have gone down in defeat. As it was, four members stood valiantly for continuing the organization, but the divisionists won by a sweeping majority and the Society for the Detection of Horse Thieves is no more. The Rhinebeck Gazette.

Yes, and if you be sure that your part be good, and another hold the contrary, yet if it be a thing that maketh no matter, you will laugh and let it pass, and refer the thing to other men, and stick you stiff and stubbornly in earnest and necessary things. William Tyndale. Sixteenth Century.

HIGH CLASS ACTS AT SHRINERS' BALL

The Kingston Shriners' dance to be held at the armory on Tuesday evening, January 16, from all accounts is going to be the biggest event of the kind to be held in Kingston this season and the best affair the Shriners have ever put on in Kingston. The entertainment of the evening is going to be the best ever held at the armory and without exaggeration an entertainment which would be well worth the price of the admission to both the dance and the entertainment.

The committee in charge of entertainment has procured Lewis and Mezzitelli, who have just returned with one of the Shubert units. They do a most wonderful whirlwind dance; nothing so fast has ever been seen in Kingston and this act alone is certain to prove a great sensation. Another act is two little girls by the name of Behan and Mack, who dance as well as they sing. They come highly recommended and are said to be the cleverest in their line of work. The salary which these two artists command is one of the largest of any artist in that line.

In connection with the two acts mentioned the Weekes and Walker, pretty girl Shirley Revue, a specialty acrobatic act and Foley and Sprijan, a hand balancing novelty act which is said to be very sensational completes the program of entertainment. In connection with these four acts there will be the orchestra of twelve picked men known as the Broadway Syncopators and the Imperial orchestra of twelve pieces. Both of the orchestras are going to put forth their best for the dancers as it will be a Metropolitan orchestra and a local orchestra competing for the honors of the evening.

The Potentate and his divan and representatives from Hudson have announced their intention of attending and delegations from various other cities will also come to Kingston for the purpose of participating in the annual dance of the Kingston Shriners which has obtained such a far famed reputation of a good time.

Tickets are going fast and may be secured from any member of the Shrine and are also for sale at the stores of M. H. Herzog, W. H. Rider, S. Cohen's Sons, J. E. Van Derveer, S. Stern and Benjamin Johnston. The proceeds of the dance are for the benefit of the children of the Industrial Home of this city.

Besides the dance feature the Shriners plan to present such a program of entertainment that this part of the evening's pleasure will attract those who do not care to dance. For those who do not participate in the dancing but who come to look on and see the entertainment the program which had been laid down this year will be well worth the price of the admission and a similar entertainment elsewhere would be as high as the price of admission to the Shriners' dance.

The armory is to be handsomely decorated for the occasion as a decoration committee of great ability has been selected to take care of this important item.

STONE RIDGE

The oyster supper will be served from 6 until 8 o'clock and will include other things besides oysters. The price of the supper will be 50 cents and half price for children. Dancing will start at 8 o'clock and continue until 1 o'clock.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

THE FOXES

Daddy Fox was devoted to Mother Fox. He had brought her food and had seen that she had eaten it at the time when her mind was on the little baby foxes.

When the little baby foxes were very, very young, Mother Fox was along with them because she wanted to be quite alone with them at first so she could whisper to them some mother fox secrets.

Mother Fox had three dear small children and was very proud of them. They had been born in the good old homestead in a hollow tree.

They were quite blind as they were born and they were blind to color.

But their helplessness only made them more appealing and wonderful to Mother Fox.

"You will grow up to be such beautiful foxes," Mother Fox said to them as they dreamed and slept.

She did not want them to become conceited, but she liked to talk to them and tell them how she loved them, and they could tell by the sound of her voice and by her sweet ways with them that she loved them.

Mother Fox believed in telling her little ones how much she cared for them because she thought it would make them want to be worthy of all those splendid things she thought of them.

"You Will Be Good to Each Other."

And their daddy thought the same way, too.

"Yes, and you will want to go hunting for mice and other small, delicious animals."

"You will enjoy insects, too."

"And once in awhile you will have a poultry banquet which will make people very angry."

"But you needn't think of people, for people and their wishes are not so important as foxes and their wishes."

"Your family name is that of Gray Fox. But you have many cousins."

"There is the Red Fox family. They are far more clever than we are, but in many ways they are like us. They, too, care devotedly for their little ones just as we do."

"The Daddy and Mother Red Foxes love each other all their lives and have so much happiness by being so devoted and fond of each other."

"The Red Fox family care more about having a superior home than we do."

"They often keep the same home for years and years and years. They have more than one entrance to their home, too, so that if they're surprised at one entrance they get away out of another."

"There are the Alaska Red Foxes, too. They dig nice homes with different entrances for safety, and they, too, make lovely mates and devoted and loving parents."

"In the winter time it is hard for them for they live far North where they have to hunt under difficulties for their food."

"Oh yes, they do not have it so easily."

"Then we have the Silver Fox cousins and the Desert Fox cousins and the Cross Fox cousins."

"And none of us are stupid. We are all very bright, though the Desert Fox family is not nearly so bright as the rest of us."

"Ah, my little foxes, grow up to be fine strong, beautiful foxes and you will hunt and be happy, and though you may be considered crafty and sly by people, you will be good to each other."

"For such are the ways of foxes. Ah, yes, such are the ways of foxes!" And Mother Fox called Daddy Fox and asked him if he didn't think the children were very beautiful.

And I think you may be able to guess the answer that Daddy Fox gave:

No Wonder He Ran.

Turning a corner at full speed, the boy collided with the minister. "Where are you running to, my little man?" asked the minister, when he had regained his breath. "Home!" panted the boy. "Ma's going to spank me." "What?" gasped the astonished minister. "Are you so eager to have your mother spank you that you have to run home so fast?" "No," shouted the boy over his shoulder, as he resumed his homeward flight, "but if I don't get there before pa, he'll do it!"

POINTS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS

To remove fruit stains there is nothing better (and perfect, harmless to cloth) for this purpose than lemon juice applied full strength. Rub it in well with the hands, then rinse in cold water. Lemon juice and salt applied to rust will, when placed in sunlight, remove it at once; if of long standing, two or three applications may be needed.

To remove stains from the hands lemon juice or vinegar mixed with corn meal is a fine agent to not only take off discolorations, but will make the hands smooth and soft. When the meal becomes dry moisten it with water. A dish of cornmeal near the sink will be found a great convenience.

Rose geranium leaves laid in the cake tins under the greased paper will give a delightful flavor to layer cake. A leaf drawn through apple jelly adds greatly to the flavor of the jelly.

A good butter maker says—Never let a cloth, be it ever so sweet and clean, come in contact with butter. Pack it in jars and cover with butter paper.

Wash hair brushes in hot water to which baking soda has been added. Add a small handful to a pint of boiling water and when dissolved dip the brushes into it, using care not to cover the backs of the brushes. Rinse in cold water and dry in the sun or a current of air. The quicker the brushes dry the stiffer will be the bristles.

When making ginger cookies, fruit cake, spice cake, or any dark cake, use cold coffee for the liquid. It not only adds flavor, but brings out the flavor of the spices.

Eat apples; they are good scavengers. Apples are said to be good for brain workers as they are rich in phosphorus. They act upon the liver, and as an old saw puts it, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away." Surely such medicine is a pleasure to take. Some one has said that an apple before retiring is a good thing for the teeth. Nature seems to recognize its value for she is more prodigal with it than with any other fruit.

Chinese Women Rarely Sold.

An erroneous notion generally held is that Chinese women are sold in marriage by their families. The father-in-law of a young widow does in deed exact a certain sum from her second bridegroom as compensation for the expenses he has been put to on her account, but it is no more a sale than the dot settled on a young girl in France. There are cases in which unhappy young women have fallen into the hands of an ambitious and cruel mother-in-law who does not scruple to sell her to an old man for a handful of money, and there are also cases in which this admirer is powerful, when he neither woos nor parleys, but exacts and threatens with ruin. In these cases the young widow is without recourse, for the scales of Chinese justice fall to the side where gold is heaped, but she has only to bear her oppressor a son and she ascends the dais of contented ruler of the household.—Review of Reviews.

Chinese Ideas About Goldfish.

That the finer kinds of goldfish are raised from the eggs of the silk moth is a popular fallacy among many Chinese. According to this belief the silk moth lays its eggs on a brick or tile, and this is placed in shallow water and exposed to the sun. In several days they hatch out minute larvae and are fed on pond slime, developing rapidly into gorgeous goldfish. Great care has to be used in the preparation of the water, but the process may be aborted by an intervening thunder-clap, which sometimes makes such havoc with the eggs that they hatch out frogs or scorpions instead of the much desired goldfish.

TWO PAPERS TELL MUCH OF RONDOUT

by Israel Sampson. Here the cantata of Esther was given for the benefit of the Dorcas Society, downtown. It is now the home of The Kingston Freeman.

Now, going a little further west and beyond the present bridge entrance was Washington Hall, built by Messrs John Derrenbacher and Frederick Stophan. Many lectures, church fairs, dances, Dutch balls, etc., were held there and there was a bar attached. One thing about the hall was the floor, which in the rear, might be raised or lowered by water power, avoiding the necessity of removing bats. The lectures introduced were the best in the United States, including Wendell Phillips, Chapin, Barnum, Mark Twain, John B. Gough, Olive Logan, Anna Dickinson, Fred Douglas, Mrs. Scott Siddons, "Blind Tom," etc. "The Rondout Social Mannercher," organized there is still in existence.

The lecture courses were given under the management of H. M. Crane and George Goebl, leader of the Twentieth Regiment Band and director of the orchestra, gave an orchestral program before the lectures. There was a fine fire department and Rondout Fire Companies used to take lots of prizes.

The Rondout creek at one time was about the most used and prosperous water way of the state according to its tonnage. It has been said, "The masts of sailing vessels awaiting cargoes to be sent to the appearance of a forest denuded of bark and foliage," and in the winter it was a fine skating place.

Mr. Roosa will tell about the advent of Major G. S. von Beck, but I have one little incident which I may relate here and which will not affect his story. As captain of the Harrison Guards he brought the militia to great success and he and his officers were presented to Gov. H. Seymour who offered Major von Beck a sword, one of six which had been presented this state by General La Fayette. Gov. Seymour complimented La Fayette as an adopted citizen and gave him as an example of the most distinguished patriotism on record. The governor also wrote this letter:

New York Executive Department, Albany, November 21, 1853.

Dear Sir: I find that none of the swords in my possession are as perfect as I supposed. The scabbards are gone. The one I read you had originally a basket-hilt, but our Revolutionary soldiers fled from it. To you these marks of service will give the sword additional value as it proves it to have been in use for a long time. It was deposited with others in the arsenal at Rome, N. Y. It was used in the Continental War between France and England. The marks upon it show it to be of French manufacture and to have belonged to the Royal armories. As this sword was a contribution from Europe to the cause of liberty on this continent, I am happy to place it in the hands of a patriotic citizen who has selected our country as his residence and who has manifested a disposition to sustain and uphold its political institutions.

Yours very truly, HORATIO SEYMOUR.

To Major G. F. von Beck.

Rondout.

Mr. Roosa's paper was as follows:

"What was for many years known to the Dutch as the landing place at Wiltwyck, Esopus and Kingston, was called the Strand. (See Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, published 1849, page 1091.)

There is no doubt that Hendrick Hudson landed at Kingston Point from his ship the Half Moon in 1609, and in October 1614, the States General of Holland granted to the United New Netherlands Company the exclusive right to visit and navigate all the waters situate in America between New France and Virginia, and under this grant the company took possession of the Hudson river and built three forts or redoubts thereon—one on Castle Island at Albany, one at the mouth of what is now called the Rondout creek—so it may be possible that the land and country about the Rondout creek which is the end of the valley of several large streams, the Rondout and Wallkill and their tributaries, concentrated in that point and extending far into the interior, furnished facilities for a trading post; one of the Indian trails which led to the Delaware river. This was undoubtedly the commencement of the trading settlement at what was afterwards called Esopus and was all that was here until after Thomas Chambers bought his tract of land of the Indians in 1652. His associates and colleagues, being Dutch, preferred the inland regions about the Plateau at Kingston with its trails into the maize countries of the Indians, in preference to the disturbing life which they would have to submit to on the banks of the Hudson.

In 1661 when Peter Stuyvesant granted his charter to Wiltwyck, the Dutch settlers were living within the confines of the settlement of Wiltwyck, extending their farming and land ownership up the valley to Hurley and Marlborough.

Although the Dutch were a phlegmatic and peaceful people, they did obtain recourse to the navigable creek at the Strand, and at the Point; its entrance to the Hudson river to which two roads from Wiltwyck led—the one going down through what was afterwards called O'Reilly's Woods to Delaware avenue to the Point; and the other practically the extension of Wall street, through the Twaitskill valley to where Wilbur afterwards was built. Most of the property at the mouth of the creek was owned by Michael Garten and afterwards Moses Cantline who built a residence on the bluff which still stands and is lately known as the North House. At the foot of this hill he built a dock and a store house. Next, going up the creek, and extending back to what is now the Kingston creek, was the property of Jacob Chambers which was inherited by Abraham Hasbrouck, the grandfather of our Mrs. Mary Hasbrouck Preston. This property extended west up the creek as far as the stone wall dividing it from the Hotelling or Steward property, which was in the middle of the street afterwards called Division street, Union avenue, and now Broadway. So this tract of land in the creek bed was held and owned until about 1820.

One Jacob Kipp settled at Rhinebeck about 1680 and owned a large tract of land extending a considerable distance up and down the river from what is now the Upper of Slate Dock, and he was accustomed to carry passengers across the river to the Point; after his death, his son Abraham Kipp, did the same.

Moses Cantline owned Kingston Point on the Kingston side of the river from about 1740. He built a dock and furnished boats to transport travelers across the river, there being no ferry across the Hudson river at that time between Albany and Newburgh. I have here a map of Kingston Point made by Christopher Tappen, the brother-in-law of George Clinton, our first governor. In 1753 the Colonial governor, George Clinton, issued a patent to Abraham Kipp and Moses Cantline granting them and their heirs and assigns forever "the full, free, sole and whole power, liberty and authority, privilege and right of setting up, establishing, using, keeping and enjoying a public ferry to be duly kept and attended for the convenience of passing and repassing with travelers and their horses, cattle and goods whatsoever, to and from the said landings of the said Abraham Kipp and Moses Cantline, exclusive of all others to keep and ferry within two miles above and below the said landings." The ferry then established has ever since been conducted and maintained under the old charter, (the original of which is in the possession of the Cornell Steamboat Company,) with changes in the character of the boats and their propelling power in accordance with the improvement of the times. The first ferryboat was a perlugger, scooped out of a log and then sawed in two lengthwise, and filled in between the sides with planks or other logs. Then an animal or horse boat was substituted using oxen and horse power to turn the wheels; and the next change was to the steamboat. In 1852 William Kelley a banker of New York instrumental in financing the building of the Hudson River railroad, Company bought the Ellerslie place, lately owned by Governor Levi P. Morton, and moved the Rhinebeck station of the Hudson River railroad to what was afterwards called Rhinecliff, when the ferry terminals were changed from the slate dock to Rhinecliff, and from Kingston Point to the foot of Ferry street where it now is.

After the discovery of coal in Pennsylvania by the Wurts family, a canal was built from the Delaware river to tide water at what is now known as Eddyville, named after Governor Eddy of Pennsylvania. The debranching of this canal was made by using the falls at Eddyville and cutting a canalway through on the west side of the creek below the falls with a guard and entrance locks similar in many respects to the Gatun locks at Colon. This waterway and locks were constructed by the best engineers obtainable at that time—among whom was the great John Ericsson who afterwards patented the propeller for steamships and caused to be built the gunboat "Monitor" for the war of our rebellion; and John A. Roebling who constructed a wonderfully conceived aqueduct over the creek at High Falls and then left to build the suspension bridge across Niagara river, and whose son Washington A. Roebling built the Brooklyn bridge, and, at the age of 84, visited Kingston to examine the bridge recently built across the Rondout creek to Esopus.

There are two hills, one on each side of what was afterward called Rondout. The one on the northeast was called by the Dutch "Vleightburg" and the other on the west "Weinburg," and before the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company built their canal at the head of navigation of the Rondout creek, Abraham Hasbrouck caused a road to be built down the valley between these hills from Delaware avenue, now known as Hasbrouck avenue, to the creek across which he caused to be maintained a ferry connecting what was known as Grote Esopus with Kline Esopus at which is now Sleightburgh, which was settled by connections of Abraham Hasbrouck. This ferry connected the highway extending from Albany to Newburgh and then back into the country to the Delaware river and to Communipaw or Jersey City. From the top of the hill back of what is now the Ludlum property from a pond found a stream to the Rondout creek along which Abraham Hasbrouck built and maintained grist mills.

Abraham Hasbrouck lived in a large frame house under the hill upon which the Hasbrouck house now stands, with the front yard sloping without obstruction down to the creek where there were floats and docks for sloops in which he carried freight and passengers to and from the great city of New York, and laid the foundation for a large day and night passenger steamboat transportation which only ceased in a measure by the building of the West Shore railroad.

Jansen Hasbrouck and his brother-in-law Gabriel W. Ludlum, sold Vleightburg to Calvin Tomkins, a cement manufacturer of Newark, N. J., and the stone from these hills were quarried by means of tunnels and was burned in kilns and ground into a hydraulic cement, a superior quality of cement, the first made in this country. After Calvin Tomkins established the cement interest at Rondout, his son-in-law James G. Lindley, an experienced engineer, came here to superintend the manufacture of cement and making tunnels and quarries through the hill formerly known as Vleightburg for the taking out of the cement stone. While this business engaged his attention during the most active part of his life, it did not divert him from an interest in the affairs of the village, town and county of his adoption. In 1852 he was the president of the village of Rondout, but his interest in the cement business overruled him from accepting it the following year. He was elected a trustee again in 1859 and officiated as such almost continually till 1870, being president a considerable part of the time. During which time the village of Rondout was transformed from a mass of almost impassable streets without sidewalks, and with water coursing through the middle of them, into a town of established grade, flagged walks and much-needed sewers, most of the engineering being effected gratuitously by Lorenzo A. Sykes, agent for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, who was also one of the trustees, assisted by Mr. Lindley. In 1870, feeling that he had given as much time and service to the improvement of the place as he could well afford, he declined filling the office again. Upon the organization of the city of Kingston, he was elected mayor and by elections filled the office for six successive years when he became congressman from this district.

Weinburg, which was in the Supplies Hook class in the division of the commons of the town of Kingston, was covered with tall pine trees, and was purchased of the Van Buren family by Thomas Scott, Rodney N. Baldwin and Hugh White.

The large trees were removed and used by John B. Jervis and his assistant James S. McEntee in building a trestle work across the cove on the east side of the Hudson river for the Hudson river railroad. The land was afterwards sold to James S. McEntee, after whom the hill was known as McEntee's hill over which now extends West Chestnut street.

In the Rondout creek at the foot of the hill below where Plantazie Kill from Hussey Hill flows into it, was a low ground called by the Dutch the "Swanleplat" partly submerged at high water, around which the canal company built a crib dock with ships making an island upon which for years they stored their coal. The development of this work and the new ideas of labor produced by it brought to this new settlement many people of ability and venture spirit and enterprise—Yankees from New England and immigrants from Europe, England, Scotland and Ireland.

Abraham Hasbrouck and his son Jansen sold a tract of land lying between Division street and Hasbrouck avenue to one John O'Reilly upon which settled those who came from the south of Ireland. And those who came from Ulster and the north of Ireland, the Scotch and English purchased land of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company west of Division street; and after the attempt to consolidate the principalities of Germany in '47 and '48, many Germans of high character and industry came and settled in the neighborhood of Hunter, German and Ravine streets, and established there a German Lutheran church; and the place was called Boiten after the first president of the company and grew and thrived commercially as a port of entry and a depot for the new coal supply.

In 1849 the settlement under the hill on the creek was chartered as a village by the legislature and called Rondout after the redoubt at the mouth of the creek, and a village form of government erected and a seal was adopted after a design by John Vanderlyn, the celebrated artist, containing a picture of the fort at the mouth of the creek with the legend on it of "Guard the Gate." It is a celebrated seal and was incorporated in the seal of the city of Kingston in 1872 and has been copied in the interior decoration on the walls of the building of public instruction at Albany after a design made by the artist Will H. Lowe.

A man named William B. Dodge came from Westerly, Rhode Island, and having purchased September 25, 1849, some land extending over rocks from Abell to Calder street, built on Abell street a store with two floors above set apart as amusement halls, which he called "The Village Hall," his residence of brick on the top of the hill, and a tenement house in the rear. Dodge was an enterprising man and a caterer to the public for its patronage and decorated the interior of his halls with pictures of battle scenes in the Mexican War.

About this time there came to Kingston from Strassburg a celebrated man—George F. von Beck who was probably a refugee. Von Beck was a man of education and ability as an engineer, and shortly entered the employ of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, from which time he commenced to leave his impression upon Rondout. Not daunted by the audacity of William P. Dodge in building the Village Hall and store, he purchased property on Canal, Clinton and Lackawanna streets and erected a hotel called the Clinton hotel after DeWitt Clinton who as governor signed the charter for the incorporation of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and an amusement hall called Clinton Hall in which he caused to be placed a heroic size portrait of DeWitt Clinton which now is in the upper hall of our county court house; and caused Jervis McEntee who was then entering upon his career as a painter to paint large canvases of the French Revolution, including the Conclergie and the Fall of the Bastille and scenes of the French mobs in Paris during the revolution of 1789, which were very much superior to the Mexican war battle pictures of Dodge, and this hall was used by the public for amusement down to the early '60's and the village hall of Dodge fell into disuse.

In 1854 von Beck purchased the site of the hotel or inn on the corner of Division and Lackawanna streets, and built a hotel which he called the Mansion House and it was so substantially built that it remains to this day. On the opposite side of Division street on what was a lane leading to the garden of Abraham Hasbrouck and called Garden street, was a hotel called the Exchange which burned in 1858, upon which von Beck built a brick building with stores on the street; offices on second floor and the upper part for a Free Mason's lodge; and this has ever since been called the Masonic Hall Building.

Von Beck, who was then called Major because he had organized a militia company, purchased a tract of land on the south side of the Rondout creek, west of the Plantazie Kill, which he laid out in village streets, and which he called South Rondout, next to which he built a large brewery for real German lager beer which was brewed all spring and summer and then put in large "tubs" or cellars cut into the rocks from which it was drawn with much German ceremony as Beck Beer at Easter with processions of German societies and the fire company of which he was the chief, and his company of militia.

During this time also there was a company of Dragons, probably all of whom deserted from German military service in '48, commanded by Captain Martin Uhle, a portrait of whom on his cream colored charger, I believe, is now in the Senate House, and who died at his home, at the corner of Post and Abell streets within the memory of many old settlers. This company of dragons was peculiar in that, it was said, it had a constitution which required that in time of peace they were to be called "The Jefferson Dragons," but in time of war, they were to be called "The Dragons of the rebellion," though many of them entered the army under President Lincoln's first call for 75,000 men.

From Abell street, running up towards Weinburg, which was then called McEntee's hill, was a road called Wurts street after the discoverer of the coal in Pennsylvania. On the south side of this street at the top of the hill had been built a residence called the president's house and in which Morris Wurts and his descendants and his niece, the wife of Lorenzo A. Sykes, lived until 1863 or '69. Wurts street was a roadway through hills of sand, which at every storm ran out into the cellar of the houses at its foot, until Lorenzo A. Sykes, agent for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, caused it to be graded in 1859 or '60, and paved with cobblestones which still remain under the modern pavement placed on top of them. On the north side of Wurts street at the top of the hill lived Thomas Cornell who built the house now occupied by Senator Rice. Thomas Cornell, known and addressed by all Kingston people as "The Major," was a man of great influence in the vicinity of Rondout and throughout Ulster and adjoining counties. He came to Rondout before the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company had perfected its business of mining and marketing its coal, and became one of its managers or directors which position he held until his death. He engaged in towing his canal boats from the Rondout creek to distributing points on the Hudson river for the sale of coal. This business developed until Mr. Cornell acquired a large interest in passenger and tow boats which developed until it is now known as the Cornell Steamboat Company, the largest on the Hudson river and New York harbor. He also maintained an interest in all the affairs of the village, insisting upon the grading of streets and even paying the assessments for doing the same for people who were unable to pay their share; and when he died in March, 1890, there was scarcely an interest in that part of Kingston which was the former village of Rondout that he had not in some way maintained and perfected. A man of good judgment, patient and untiring in working for the development of everything that he thought was for the better development, not only of Rondout, but Kingston and the adjoining county as well.

Then commenced the building of crib docks on the north side of the Rondout creek into which was taken the sand from Wurts street and the hills on either side until the docks were completely filled from the Sleightburgh ferry at the foot of Hasbrouck avenue towards the present site at the mouth of the creek. This is the inception and growth of Rondout which by the industry and spirit of its new inhabitants became the business and money center of what is now the city of Kingston. The cement interest of Calvin Tomkins, its foundries and machine shop, the business of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and the flagstone which was brought to Wilbur down its road through Twaitskill, made the name of Kingston of Kingston greater than any other community in the state of New York, except New York, Buffalo and possibly Albany.

Many interesting circumstances of the growth of the old village have been told by Mrs. Preston in her paper, omitting modestly what her grandfather, Abraham Hasbrouck and her father, Jansen Hasbrouck did, who was a man of large and cultivated attainments, having graduated from Yale College in the Class of 1831, and having there friends among its most distinguished students, such as Bishop Kipp of California, and Chaveller Wyckoff, of national reputation. The energy and thrift of Rondout caused a great change among residents of the old village of Kingston and although the older and more substantial descendants of the Dutch and Huguenots lived in Kingston, the spirit of thrift and enterprise of Rondout left an impression upon this people until it was found necessary to consolidate the two places in one city which was accomplished in 1872 by not only uniting Kingston and Rondout together, but adding Wilbur, Ponckhockie at the mouth of the creek, and Wiltwyck in the middle of the city, owned and laid out by the energy and ability of the Wyckoff family and Henry H. Reynolds, the father of Miss Sarah H. Reynolds, one of your oldest and most substantial charter members.

After Mr. Roosa read his paper, Mrs. Preston read the following "Poem."

Rondout in the Fifties.
(By the late John Horton in 1854.)

Rondout, on the pretty Rondout creek, will be a city very quick. It has one bank and lots of stores. Besides the hardware store of More's. Lots of steamboats we have here. That bring up freight and take down beer. They bring up merchants' eggs for Pass. The North America and Santa Claus. At Cornell's dock the Santa's moored. For freight and passage apply on board. At Romer & Gillett's, down below, The North America's colors blow. The Mansion House is going up. And there the lager beer we'll sup.

We go to Metzger's on the hill, We get our boots of William Still. Winter, he keeps a fancy store; Kitting & Decker are next door. Candell & Rooms across the street, And 'tween them Deussen's drug store nest.

Snyder's on the corner and Davis below, 'Tis the post and law office you know. From Smith's tailor shop Devo's can be seen, With Spero's big saloon between. The next you find is Brother Dunn, Stebbins & Staples, too, are some. Welch, he keeps a tailor shop, Schoonmaker & Wood sell ginger pop.

McElroy, he keeps the Hotel Exchange, And Kerr's below is just the range; The ferryboat Rhine, which there is high. From Rondout does to Rhinebeck ply.

Good horses Davis keeps to please, As doth our worthy Major Keys. Omnibuses here have taken root, Or we'd have to go to Kingston about.

The Clinton is kept by Mr. Hart, And Clinton Hall is of it a part. 'Tis here we have all kinds of shows, Balls and dances and fandangoes.

The boatmen here, all of you know, Get most of their harness from Mr. Stow. Or else they go around to Gordon Abbey, Who keeps the show that is far from shabby.

Van Buren, as you know full well, He keeps the first class hats to sell. Ludlum & Schoonmaker sell good flour, And Rahmer's town clock strikes the hour.

If any one of you should need Aught in the shape of grain or feed, Then "up the dock" right off repair To S. Abbey and the McEntee there. Derrenbacher & Stephan are there too.

With A. B. Hathaway in plain view, Charlie Carter there does blow For the Elmendorf, you know.

Ed Hudler he keeps a lumber yard, Norris and Stone, they sell good lard. Don't fail to go, of you have the means, To Jimmy Davis's for pork and beans.

John Dodge, he keeps the Village Hall, Just give his store below a call. John Dougherty and Diamond keep in tune, And next year find Bob Penn's saloon.

By my advice you will let alone, The other saloon, the Hippodrome, The Dutchman, here, stay stay ye, Do often get as tight as bricks.

The Maseppa sails from Albanee, And touches at Rondout and Poughkeepsie. At half-past six, the Alida sails; To make good time she seldom fails.

The market is near the Clinton Hotel; 'Tis there all kinds of things they sell. They sell potatoes by the peck, And the Market and the Hotel and Clinton Hall, and the Mansion House, and other things too numerous to mention, are owned by Major George F. von Beck.

The big stone jug half up the hill (I'll tell you its name if you just keep still). 'Tis the office, as you all may see, Of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company.

The cannellers, too, they like to run; For they get their 97 cents a ton; 'Tis the money that every canneller likes. And the company's agent is Major Sykes.

The Rondout ladies look so sweet, They're almost good enough to eat. When I look at them, in faith I say: 'I'd like to throw myself away.'

The milliner shop on Abell street, Makes all of them look extremely neat. In the same street an engine new There is number one and number two.

From there in truth, I am no liar, They run like fury to a fire, The firemen are fair in all their dealings, And get along without hard feelings.

Down on the dock, you'll find, if you wish, All kinds of oysters, clams and fish. Shanghai Bob, he is a coon, And keeps the Turkey Buzzard Saloon.

There, the fellows go when they want liquor, But Captain Maison owns the "Kicker." Vessels it tows, yet in snow or rain, And so does the steam tug, W. B. Crane.

Four soldier companies, all well armed, In Rondout village have been formed. Three belong to the regiment, But the other one is independent.

The Washington and the Jackson Rifles, And Harrison Guards ain't scared at trifles, And then the Jefferson Volunteers At war's alarm should have no fears.

Across the creek, at Sleightburgh Ferry, We will go over and be merry. Walk faster now; come, let's be done. And get to the river at Port Ewen.

That office on the dock you see Belongs to the Pennsylvania Coal Company. The steamboat Pittston, she's the Gal. To tow boats down from the canal, One thing in Rondout, as sure as a pop.

I near forgot, Caspar's barber shop, In these few lines, Oh, let me rave, 'Tis a very fancy place to shave. Caspar cuts boards off for strictly cash.

But he leaves upon us our mustache, A sofa factory here'll be reared, And the sofa will be stuffed with beard.

While Russia is fighting with the Turks, We'll be putting up gas works And then the streets will be so light, That fellows won't have a chance to stay out until 9 o'clock in the morning and pretend that they got lost when they come home light.

There's Sam's store, and the steps at the end, That up to the Courier office wend. If and when you start at the top you'll be sadder, Because it's a regular Jacob'sadder.

It differs from Jacob's ladder, quite, The devil is there, not angels bright, 'Tis the printer's devil that I mean, Who on the ladder often is seen.

City Built Over Boiling Water, Carlsbad seems to rest on a vast bed of boiling water.

Mr. Robert A. Hudson.

According to report in London, Lady Northcliffe, widow of the famous publisher, is to marry Sir Robert A. Hudson, her husband's closest friend. The rumor adds that when Northcliffe realized he was dying he expressed a hope that Sir Robert would wed Lady Northcliffe.

ROSENDALE.

Rosendale, Jan. 8.—The Rosendale Baptist Church has sustained a genuine loss in the death of one of its oldest and respected members Mrs. Eliza C. Snyder. Mrs. Snyder has been a member of the Rosendale Baptist Church for forty-seven years, although, for some time because of the infirmities of old age, she has not been able to attend the service.

She has a deep and keen interest in all the activities and progress of the church life, especially the recent extensive improvements on the church building, and took great delight in soliciting contributions from her friends for this purpose. She was devoted to the present pastor who feels the personal loss of a true and faithful friend. Our sister was permitted to remain with us on earth more than her allotted time, having had a long life in which to serve the Lord. Her home-going leaves a vacant place which never can be filled in those many hearts and lives of those who loved and honored her. Every church is the poorer when their aged members pass on to occupy their mansion in the Celestial City.

DREYFUSS HERE AGAIN TOMORROW

When Schenectady Opposes Local Quintet On The Armory Court—Kingston Will Be Extended In This, Its Third Game of Second Half.
When Schenectady clashes with the local representatives Wednesday evening at the local armory court Joe Dreyfuss will be in the former's line-up. Last week Dreyfuss played here illegally with Amsterdam, due to a misunderstanding. Amsterdam believed Dreyfuss had been returned to them by Schenectady, which only promised a release of him if certain arrangements were made.
Schenectady played here two weeks ago tomorrow and put up the best fight that had been seen here this season. With Joe Dreyfuss tomorrow night their team will be considerably strengthened, as he is a fast man with a wonderful eye for the basket in his last appearance here he played a guard position against Benny Borgman. Of course he couldn't hold the lightning forward from rolling up a big score, but he caged five pretty field goals. This will be the third contest for the home club during this second half, and they are out to make it three straight. It has been said before that the Morgenweck clan has not been beaten on its home court. Schenectady has as good a chance as any of the state league teams of pulling off this big surprise.

MARTY FRIEDMAN WILL RETIRE

Marty Friedman, one of the greatest basketball players of his day and for the past three years one of the mainstays of the Albany team in the New York Basketball League, will leave the court game on Saturday evening, following the game at Albany between Albany and Amsterdam.
Albany is planning to give Friedman a big send off when he rings down the curtain on his court career. Friedman is well known by basketball fans in this city as he is one of the oldtimers. He entered the game when most of the players now in the league were mere children and kept his strength and speed up until the present time. This year he has been bothered with an injured knee and at times he has had trouble getting around.

K. H. S. DEBATEES MEET POUGHKEEPSIE MARCH 23.

The Kingston High School debating team will debate with Poughkeepsie High School March 23 on the subject, "Resolved, that in view of the economic distress of Europe, the United States should cancel at least fifty per cent of the war debts of the allies." Kingston won the toss and has until Friday of this week to decide which side of the question it wishes to defend. Where the debate will be held will be left to Poughkeepsie to decide, which means that it very likely will be held in Poughkeepsie.
The principal changes from the rules governing last year's debates are the adoption of a uniform judge's ballots, the provision for a three man rebuttal instead of a single man rebuttal, and the defining of terms by the competing teams.
